IF INNOCENT

An empty jacket falling off a chair. We filmed it in the studio before tonight. He rejected the live stunt, then the screen version. I kept pushing the coordinator. I wanted to sit here and watch him recognize himself in that jacket while everyone laughed. Vincent, please don't look relieved because the chair was empty. I spent weeks imagining him falling. I can still hear how delighted I was when we got the sound right. I wish somebody would switch that thing off.

IF MURDERER

The film rehearsed Grant's entrance. He agreed to fall after the private toast. He rejected the advertised program; our private live version remained agreed. I expected him to get up. Please stop looking at me when you say collapse. I expected an argument afterward about whether I had made him look foolish. That was the performance we had arranged.
