The Isfahan Star Bowl

Central Iran (Isfahan) • c. 1250 / Hammered brass with silver inlay

A broad ceremonial basin whose interior maps constellations around a dark eight-pointed star. The object first appears in a European collection in 1912. Its documented chain of ownership becomes incomplete between 1940 and 1978 before reappearing in a Swiss private collection. Grant Larceny acquired it in 1992. The Meridian has announced it as the centerpiece of Treasures of the World.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Moon Jar Of Haeju

Korea • late 18th century / White-glazed porcelain

An unusually full-bodied white jar assembled from two thrown hemispheres. Slight asymmetry gives the vessel its quiet character. Loaned from the Larceny Collection for the first time.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Cedar & Cloud Screen

Japan • Edo period, c. 1740 / Ink, mineral pigment, and gold leaf on paper

A six-panel folding screen depicting cedar branches disappearing into bands of cloud. A collector's seal on the reverse links the screen to a Kyoto merchant family in the nineteenth century.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Night Garden Album Leaf

Northern India • Mughal period, c. 1660 / Opaque watercolor and gold on paper

A moonlit garden scene populated by birds, flowering vines, and a single reading figure. The page was separated from a larger album before entering the European market.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

The Storyteller Goldweights

Ghana • 19th century / Cast brass

A set of small figurative weights made for measuring gold dust. Their forms encode proverbs about speech, patience, obligation, and reputation. The set is presented here as a study in art, commerce, and memory.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Cusco Silver Writing Box

Peru • c. 1780 / Silver, cedar, and velvet

A portable writing box made in Cusco with repoussé floral ornament. Its compartments hold ink, paper, seals, and correspondence - the infrastructure of long-distance colonial administration.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Laurel Krater

Southern Italy • 4th century BCE / Red-figure ceramic

A large mixing vessel decorated with laurel branches and two musicians. The museum label carefully notes that the vessel's modern ownership history begins only in 1968.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Indigo Court Textile

Southwestern Nigeria • early 20th century / Indigo-dyed cotton

A large resist-dyed cloth whose repeating geometry shifts across the field rather than remaining perfectly regular. Displayed flat to emphasize both pattern and handwork.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

Study For Red Transit

Mariana Costa (Brazilian, b. 1978) • 2004 / Oil, wax, and graphite on linen

A contemporary painting of layered transit maps, erased routes, and blocks of red pigment. The work entered the Larceny Collection shortly after the artist's first major international exhibition.

TREASURES OF THE WORLD

The Larceny Collection

The Meridian Museum of Art & World Cultures
Opening-night gala / October 30, 2026

An exhibition of art and culture from around the world. All objects and collection histories in this party kit are fictional.

- Star Bowl: thrift-store metallic bowl, decorative charger, or inexpensive brass-colored bowl on a black cloth or box pedestal.
- Moon Jar: any plain white vase or ceramic jar.
- Screen: folded foam board or trifold display board with a printed or hand-drawn branch motif.
- Album Leaf / Red Transit: print any public-domain-style decorative pattern or make abstract art on cardstock; the placard does most of the world-building.
- Goldweights: arrange inexpensive brass-colored charms, keys, or small metal objects in a shallow case.
- Writing Box: jewelry box, cigar-style craft box, or small wooden container.
- Krater: dark vase or urn with a printed decorative band taped around it.
- Indigo Textile: patterned blue fabric, scarf, table runner, or thrifted textile.
- Do not spend money trying to make every object literal. One convincing centerpiece plus museum lighting, labels, and room signs will sell the fiction.
